SATURDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 6, 1858.

THE U. S. SENATE.

Your correspondent, for one, will be sorry when the Senate shall transfer itself from its present cosy quarters to the new chamber in preparation for it. The change will not be for the better. Here, as it were, conjured into the compass of a small circle, may be seen at one glance the leading political spirits of the country. The first seat on the left as you enter is occupied by Senator Mason, of Virginia. He is one of the blu-bloodsone of the sangre azula of the Oid Dominion, a very incarnation of F. F. V. 'ism. Right across, on the right, is the thin, tall person of Cameron, of Pennsylvania. He is the antipode of Mason. At a little distance from Cameron, in the same circle of seats, you see Seward, a short gentleman, with a prominent beak-a regular St. Anthony's nose. The redoubtable New Yorker is of a reddish, sandy complexion, which indicates a temperament generally associated with great physical and intellectual activity. Seward's voice seems to be altogether disproportioned to his the chest of a giant-so deep and sonorous is it. Next to Seward comes bluff, witty, new to the Senate, and indeed to the country, who have not yet made their mark. How they will open up, I cannot prophecy.-There is Chandler, from Michigan. He rather ill matched span. Doolittle, of Wisconsin, talks like "a Methodist parson." Below, on the same side, sits Senator Fessenden, of Maine. He is also one of the humanitarian brethren. He is evidently a man of resolution, ability and culture. His countenance is rather rigid, severe and puritanish. Messrs. Collamer and are grave and reverend seignors both, with an unmistakeable New England air. Below Fessenden, sits young Senatir Pugh, of Ohio, with a well bearded countenance; his United States. clear open forehead, such an one as the physiologist holds in high estimation. Great energy, and a vigorous, decisive character, evidently belong to the able young Ohioan, who represents Young America in the grave body to which he belongs. The word Senate, as is well known, implies age in its members; but capacity is an equivalent for it in Mr. Pugh's case. Right up amongst the magnates of free-soilism, its sages and expounders, sits Toombs, of Georgia, the most noticeable man in the Senate. One would hardly look for the distinguished Georgian in such an environment. He can take care of himself, however, in the midst of any number of foes. You feel sure of that as you contemplate his fine massive countenance, visibly stamped with the zoal and superscription of mind and strong manhood. Near Toombe site Senator Benjamin, of Louisiana -a short, muscular, compact personage, with as keen and logical an intellect as the best of his compeers. There is no bett-r lawyer in the Senate than Benjamin. The spir- known as the most powerful manure in the

On the same side, too, lower down, sits Senator Evans of South Carolina, a grandfatherly, Pickwickian, benevolent looking old gentleman-the very last personage who you would suppose to be the chosen representative of the land of nullification and fire-eating .-Senator Crittenden of Kentucky also sits on this side; his locks are liberally powdered with the frosts of time; but old as he is, and long associated with the Senatorial history of the country, he can cope in debate with any antagonist, however strong. The venerable and that the heirs of the said John Higdon will, Kentuckian is still full of fire and vim; his in due time, apply to the Commissioner of the features are open and strongly marked; his General Land Office, for scrip in lieu of and in temperament is choloric and easily aroused to a consuming ire. Preston King, of New York, is the opposite of Seward, his colleague, in person; he never will lie awake from leanness; he sleeps soundly of nights, and is of a Daniel Lambertish obesity; viewed a tergo, he forms a spacious parallelogram; if he had a Dutch name one might suppose him to be a lineal descendant from Walter the Doubter described by Diedrich Knickerbocker. Senator Summer, of Massachusetts, belongs on this side of the Senate, but he is not present. His colleague, Wilson, sits at the immediate left of Seward; Wilson is not a man to attract notice, whether sedant or levant, in his chair or on his feet; he is a very ordinary speaker. Crossing to the left of the above. Senator Slidell, of Louisiana, is of reverend years, with an abundance of whitened hair upon his "frosty | TELLY STRAINERS, Jelly Mould-, Farina pow," a high forehead, and florid, sanguine Boilers, Chaing Dishes. Coffee Uins, Egg complexion. Senator Davis, of Mississippi, is a spare, hawk-faced personage, with a musical voice. He is fluent and impressive in debate, with something of the intonation of a Methodist parson. His SEWING MACHINE, for Washington and Wa Senatorial career draws towards its close. Senator Douglas, too, is a prominent figure on this side of the Senate. His "perpendicular precipice of forehead," as the New improved plan at low prices. At the same time, its numbers are not so great as to create confusion and distract the attention. Vice President Breckinridge has just the figure and countenance to preside over the deliberations of such a body. His leonine aspect and stately person make him an object of mark as he proceeds up or down the avenue. He is a fine specimen of the Kentucky hombre. I had almost forgotten to mention Senator Clark, of New Hampshire, whose personal resemblance to Rufus Choate is remarkable. Whether the resemblance extends any further will be evident when he opens his mouth to speak. Thus far he has maintained a demure silence. He is
